The Swedish King, Charles X Gustav, was actively seeking the Polish throne. However, as the result of several earlier successes in battle, the Swedish army was exhausted and he was forced to retreat from the Poles, who had managed to amass a large defensive force. Under the supervision of France, as mediator through Antoine de Lumbres, for Louis XIV, Grand Marshal George Lubomirski, for the Polish Crown, and Prazmaski, Chancellor of Lithuania; Jan Leczezijski and Andreas Morstyn of Poland, Bjorn Oxenstierna and Magnus de la Gardie of Sweden; d'Overbeck of Somnitz and Osten, for the Elector of Brandenburg, and Baron de Liebstein for the Emporor of Austria, the peace treaty was effected and concluded between the two countries.

As a result of the settlement, Hungary became free, with the City of Buda. Venice repossessed Candia (Crete), and Poland the cities of Podolie and Camieniec. All had joined forces to start the siege of Constantinople. As the Russians had only joined the coalition in 1686, the medallist-engraver was, presumably, hopeful that the Russians would participate, also, in this alliance.

Medallic Issue

- *769 Medal, gilt bronze, ca. 1847. "Christ", by Allen and Moore. Full torso, front/Christ and supplicants. Given by E. I. Powell to Frederick E. Thesiger, Bart. in 1847 and so inscribed on edge. 64mm. VF . . . 250 - 350

Frederick Thesiger - later, a baronet and "Sir Frederick" - was born in St. Vincent, West Indies, and grew up intending to study law, appear before the Bar and then be admitted to practice in the West Indies. In his early years he served in the Royal Navy (possibly as a "Midshipman", a position often obtained by members of the landed gentry) but left the Navy sometime around 1807.

A disastrous volcanic eruption devastated his father's estates, decidedly impoverishing the family. Frederick studied law and decided to practice as a barrister (trial lawyer as opposed to solicitor, a non-trial lawyer). By advice of a colleague he decided to try his skills in England. He did well, becoming King's Counsel in 1834, Attorney General in 1845, and then was created Baron Chelmsford by Queen Victoria, and became a Privy Councillor in 1858.

Eventually retiring, he continued active in judicial work both in the House of Lords and the Privy Council. In general, Sir Robert was possibly the most popular leading counsel of his day.

(Two Catholic clerics in the Archdiocese of San Antonio were consulted for the translation and description of this medal. They make comment that it appears great liberties were taken with the Spanish-to-Latin inscription, and its relevance to the theme of the medal, by the medallist and his advisors. The Latin translates to "Under the authority of Franco there is solemnly inaugurated this 28th day of July 1953, this office, for public documents and money." Further confusion arises when the "Spanish-to-Latin" text is re-translated into English.)
